PREFACE AND ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The late W. G. Lambert taught himself to copy cuneiform texts in the British Museum in the early 1950s and became a master of the art. He continued to make his distinctive pencil drawings until 2011, the year of his death. Many were published in his books, Babylonian Wisdom Literature, Babylonian Literary Texts (CT 46), Atra-hasīs, Babylonian Oracle Questions, and Babylonian Creation Myths, and in his very many journal articles, book chapters, and minor works. Lambert's achievement as a copyist is summed up in a biographical memoir commissioned by the British Academy (George 2015b: 338–39):

[In 1951] he became a regular visitor to the Students' Room in the Department of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities at the British Museum. Here, under the initial guidance of the assistant keeper D. J. Wiseman (1918–2010), he taught himself to draw cuneiform texts from the original clay tablets. He had a very good eye for cuneiform signs but was not a born draughtsman and found it difficult at first to produce drawings with which he was satisfied. Quite soon, however, he had developed his own distinctive style. It was a compromise between the exact drawings of the kind produced by natural artists like Arno Poebel (which he admired enormously) and the freehand "copies" of prolific cuneiformists like R. Campbell Thompson (which he did not). In pursuit of clarity, he straightened slanting lines of text and introduced space between them. In pursuit of accuracy, he measured the horizontal distances between the vertical wedges of all the cuneiform signs on a given line of text and mapped them on to ruled paper, reproducing the signs as they were written, not in standardized form. He drew the whole at two, three or four times lifesize, having learned that publishers of illustrated books required artwork in magnified form, so as to give a neater effect when reduced in publication.

In this way he produced beautifully clear cuneiform copies which made the text easier to read than the clay tablet from which it was taken, replicated the distinctive character of the ductus, and retained the exact proportions of the signs and any breaks in the surface. This latter point was essential, for Lambert insisted that a good Assyriologist should try to read what was damaged as well as what was clear, and to that end reproduction of the line of text in exact proportion, signs, damage and breaks, was paramount. What he did not do, in common with many others of that time, was attempt to represent a clay tablet as an archaeological object. Though he was certainly alive to the information that could be obtained from examining the physical object, especially the curvature of its surfaces and the place of its edges in relation to the inscription, he did not deem it necessary to include in his copies large expanses of broken clay. For him, a clay tablet was foremost a vehicle for cuneiform text, and it was the inscribed surface alone that he reproduced in drawing.

So prolific was Lambert's production of copies of cuneiform texts that he left on his death a very large number of sheets of drawings (folios), sorted by genre into folders and stored in a filing cabinet in his bedroom in Birmingham. In the months following the removal of Lambert's academic Nachlass to Buckhurst Hill, the sheets were numbered and indexed by the present editors. The individual sheets of cuneiform copies bear the folio numbers 1–92, 225, 405–91, 762–1031, 1064–2046, 4117, 4307, 4596, 6141–297, 6304, 6690–92, 6704, 7302–8, 8211–25, 29202. Many copies occupy several folios. Some drawings are copies that had been published and then returned to their maker (220+), and others are copies by other scholars (49+), but by far the majority of them are copies that Lambert made but did not see published. Three hundred and twenty-nine of these previously unpublished copies fill the present volume. The remaining portion will fill a second.

The texts collected in this volume are organized by genre: commemorative and votive inscriptions (nos. 1–8), late copies of royal inscriptions (nos. 9–18), other historical and historical-literary compositions (nos. 19–24), late copies of royal correspondence (nos. 25–31), Sumerian literary compositions (nos. 32–39), Akkadian-language compositions of mythological and “epic” content (nos. 40–55), Babylonian and Assyrian hymns, prayers, and praise poetry (nos. 56–166), incantations (nos. 167–251), wisdom literature (nos. 252–317), and fragments of unidentified literary compositions (nos. 318–29). Drawings of divination prayers (*ikribi*s), omen compendia, expository and scholarly texts, god-lists and lexical lists, will appear in the second volume in due course.

Most of the drawings are copies of cuneiform tablets and fragments in the British Museum, made in the 1950s and early 1960s during Lambert’s summer vacations in London and later, after his move to Birmingham in 1964, during his weekly visits to the museum’s Students’ Room. This first volume contains 301 British Museum pieces, consisting of 438 numbered fragments and a few without numbers. Many of the pieces were joined by Lambert himself and bear witness to his remarkable talent for identifying broken fragments and reconstructing larger pieces from them. The volume is the largest publication of the British Museum’s tablets to have appeared for a considerable time. The drawings of the other twenty-eight cuneiform texts published here were made at museums in Berlin, Birmingham, Cambridge (UK), Cambridge (Mass.), Durham, Istanbul, Manchester, Oxford, Philadelphia, and Sheffield. On Lambert’s behalf, the editors acknowledge with gratitude the kind consent of the authorities of all these museums to the publication of his drawings of objects in their care.

Very few of the pencil copies had been inked in at the time of their creator’s death, but they were all intended for eventual publication, because Lambert did not usually make rough copies and did not go to the trouble of making a drawing unless he intended to publish it. It is equally certain that Lambert would have collated each drawing against the original tablet before inking it. This exercise has probably been carried out for very few of the drawings, so that inevitably some corrections and alterations that he would have made have not been made. We did not think it appropriate as editors to tamper with the drawings ourselves and for that reason have not collated them, except in a handful of cases where we were in no doubt that Lambert would himself have made an alteration.

The pencil drawings have been finished by the editors using the technique of digital inking that was employed by Henry Buglass and Junko Taniguchi to complete the plates of Lambert’s last book, Babylonian Creation Myths (2013). Some of Buglass’s images were not used in that book and are published here. The credit for inking is as follows: by pen, Lambert: text nos. 2, 7, 10, 53, 71–72, 237, 241, 246, 250, 286, 292, 297, 316, 328; digitally, Buglass: nos. 47–50, 133, 245; Taniguchi: nos. 1, 3–4, 6, 9, 20–22, 26–31, 34, 42–46, 56–61, 63–70, 73, 75, 77–118, 120–21, 123–27, 167–214, 230–36, 239–40, 242–44, 247–49, 251, 258, 279, 314, 319–21, 326; George: nos. 5, 8, 11–19, 23–25, 32–33, 35–41, 51–52, 54–55, 62, 74, 76, 119, 122, 128–32, 134–66, 215–29, 238, 252–57, 259–78, 280–85, 287–91, 293–96, 298–313, 315, 317–18, 322–25, 327, 329.

Some of the cuneiform tablets drawn by Lambert have subsequently been copied and published by other scholars. Except in a few cases we have thought it useful to publish Lambert’s drawing nevertheless. His rare combination of unmatched experience in reading cuneiform and excellence in draughtsmanship always brings greater understanding of each tablet he copied. It is important for scholarship that this life’s work of a master cuneiformist is publicly available for consultation.

A small number of individual tablets raised questions that could be answered only by their curators. For responses to our queries we are indebted to Jon Taylor (British Museum), Craig Barclay and Rachel Barclay (University of Durham Oriental Museum), Lucilla Burn (Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge), and Grant Frame (University Museum, Philadelphia). Stefan Maul (University of Heidelberg) kindly identified tablets in Berlin that are already published or forthcoming in the series Keilschrifttexte aus Assur literarischen Inhalts. Christopher Walker, Enrique Jiménez, Mary Frazer, and Zsombor Földi volunteered information and made important identifications. To all these institutions and individuals go the editors' grateful thanks.

The drawings of cuneiform tablets are preceded by a catalogue and an index. The catalogue draws on annotations made by Lambert on his copies and in his notebooks, and sometimes quotes them, but it is not his work, and failings therein and in the index are the responsibility of the first-named editor.

Catalogue of Texts

All objects are clay tablets or tablet fragments, unless described otherwise.

Special abbreviations: cat. = catalogued, ed. = edited, // = duplicates

Citations in the catalogue of transliterations by folio number refer to the page numbers of Lambert's seven British Museum notebooks, which occupy the range folios 8897–10330. Scanned images of the notebooks are posted online at <http://oracc.museum.upenn.edu/contrib/lambert/>.

1–8. Commemorative and Votive Inscriptions

1. DUROM N2264, stone macehead. Content suggests a provenance in Girsu (Telloh). Dedication of Ur-Ninmar, ensi of Lagaš, to the god Šulšaga. Formerly in the collection of the Dukes of Northumberland, presumed acquired by Henry, Lord Warkworth, later Earl Percy (1871–1909), the eldest son of the seventh duke (Lambert 1979: 1). Loaned to the British Museum in 1939, purchased by the University of Durham in 1950, and now in the university's Oriental Museum.
2. BM 130829 (1949–11–12, 6), eye-stone. Dedicated to Šamaš by Hammurapi of Babylon. RIM E.4.3.6.2004, ed. Frayne 1990: 361–62. Formerly no. 2406 in the collection of the Dukes of Northumberland, loaned to the British Museum in 1939 and donated in 1949.
3. BM 56614 (82–7–14, 995A), shaft and head of a clay cone, excavated by Rassam at Sippar (Abu Habba). Inscription of Hammurapi of Babylon recording the construction of Sippar's wall. Exemplars 5–6 of RIM E.4.3.6.2 Sumerian version: ll. 1–46 (shaft), 36–40, 63 ff. (head), ed. Frayne 1990: 333–36.
4. Ni 10753, showing join to Ni 833 rev. (BE I/129), excavated at Nippur. Copy on clay tablet of bilingual inscription of Ammišaduqa, king of Babylon. Part of RIM E.4.3.10.1, ed. Frayne 1990: 425–27.
5. BCM 87'57 (ND 4319), stone duck weight, excavated by Mallowan at Nimrud. Property of Nergal-ilāya, officer of Adad-nārāri III, king of Assyria (810–783 BC). Photograph and edition in George 1979: 134, no. 47, and pl. 17.
6. DUROM N2266, stone macehead. Dedicated to the god Nabû by Nabû-mukin-apli, a governor of Babylon in the early first millennium BC. Photograph and translation in Ball 1899: 216–17; see further Brinkman 1968: 171 n. 1034 (may be “seventh century”); Finkel 1987, copy from cast. RIM B.6.0.2001, ed. Frame 1995: 271–72. Collection history is the same as no. 1.
7. Sm 1197, from Nineveh. Fragment of an inscription of Esarhaddon, king of Assyria (680–669), similar to RINAP Esarhaddon 48: 82–84, ed. Leichty 2011: 108. Transliteration folio 10108.
8. Sheffield Museum J98.92, clay cylinder fragment. Content suggests a provenance at Dilbat (Tell ed-Dulaim, Dailem). Part of a building inscription of an unidentified Assyrian king, “governor of Babylon,” recording work on E-ibbi-Anum, the temple of Uraš at Dilbat.

9–18. Late Copies of Royal Inscriptions

9. BM 77438 (84–2–11, 178), purchased from Spartali & Co. and probably from Babylon. Obv.: Late Babylonian copy of an inscription of Gaddaš, king of Babylon. See further Brinkman 1976: 127–28; Stein 2000: 149–50.
10. K 11536, from Nineveh. Neo-Babylonian copy of an inscription of, or text about, a Kassite-period king. Another copy: Brinkman 1976: pl. 5, ed. p. 385, no. 10.
11. Rm II 405, from Nineveh. Neo-Assyrian copy of a bilingual commemorative inscription of Burnaburiaš, king of Babylon, cat. Brinkman 1976: 117 E.3.9. Very probably the same composition as nos. 12–15 (Borger apud Brinkman 1985: 249 n. 2). Ed. Bartelmus 2016: 502 MS F, copy p. 501.
12. K 4807+Sm 977+79–7–8, 80+314, from Nineveh. Neo-Assyrian copy of a bilingual composition commemorating the dedication of a chariot to Enlil by a king of Babylon, probably Burnaburiaš. Old copy of K 4807 in IV R¹ 12, composite copy of K 4807+Sm 977 with nos. 14 and 15 in IV R² 12, ed. Zimmern 1906: 153–56; Stein 2000: 170–76 (Akk. only). On this composition, see further Lambert 1973: 277; Borger 1975: 228 sub IV R² t12; Brinkman 1976: 141–42. J.5.1; Brinkman 1985: 249 (see no. 11). New ed. Bartelmus 2016: 502–10, MS A, copy pp. 498–99.
13. Sm 699, from Nineveh. Duplicate of no. 12, q.v. Another copy: Brinkman 1985: 252. Probably part of no. 14. Ed. Bartelmus 2016: 504–5, MS D, copy p. 501.
14. K 1832+5072+5249+DT 5, from Nineveh. Duplicate of no. 12, q.v., text incorporated in IV R² 12. Only reverse surface is preserved, but obverse fragments may be no. 13 and, from the bottom of the obverse, almost certainly K 6727 (so Borger 1975: 228 “Schluss Vs.”; copy Lambert 1973: 274). Ed. Bartelmus 2016: 506–10, MS B, copy p. 500.
15. K 8269, from Nineveh. Duplicate of no. 12, q.v. Old copy: Delitzsch 1887: 56–57, text incorporated in IV R² 12. Ed. Bartelmus 2016: 503–5, 507–9, MS C, copy p. 501.
16. Sm 2030+81–7–27, 231, from Nineveh. Identified as a further source for the composition represented by nos. 12–15 by Borger (apud Brinkman 1985: 249 n. 2) and Lambert (folio 9972: “dup.” of K 6727). Transliteration folio 9972.
17. BM 98846 (Th 1905–4–9, 352), excavated at Nineveh by Thompson in 1905, probably in the temple of Nabû. Identified by Lambert as related to nos. 12–15 (folio 2265). Transliteration folio 9887.
18. K 18603, from Nineveh. Perhaps from the same tablet as no. 17 (so Lambert folio 2265). RIM B.2.0.1001, ed. Frame 1995: 68.

19–24. Other Historical and Historical-Literary Compositions

19. BM 96260 (1902–4–12, 372), purchased from Géjou, probably from Borsippa. Fragment of a Late Babylonian chronicle about [...]–Sîn, king of Ur.
20. K 3992, from Nineveh. Fragment mentioning Agum and the “daughters of Babylon.” See Brinkman 1976: 96, D^a.5.1; Stein 2000: 177–78.
21. 81–7–27, 117, from Nineveh. Dynastic Chronicle, exemplar C. Old copy: ADD 888 (Johns), ed. Grayson 1975: 144.
22. Rm 957, from Nineveh, joins Rm 142 (Lambert 1957: pl. 4; photograph of joined fragments: CDLI P426359.). Neo-Assyrian copy of the Tukultī-Ninurta epic.
23. K 5191, from Nineveh. Neo-Assyrian copy of the bilingual composition commemorating Nebuchadnezzar I’s return of the statue of Marduk to Babylon. RIM B.2.4.9 ex. 3, ed. Frame 1995: 29.
24. BM 35000 (Sp II 524), purchased from Spartali & Co., probably from Babylon. Late Babylonian copy of the same text as no. 23, q.v. RIM B.2.4.9 ex. 4, ed. Frame 1995: 29.

25–31. Late Copies of Royal Correspondence

25. BM 55628 (82-7-4, 229), purchased from Spartali & Co., probably from Babylon. Late Babylonian school-exercise tablet (Gesche 2000: 711), narrow columns, only one side copied. Excerpt from the royal letter known as the “Weidner Chronicle” (M. Frazer).
26. BM 141832 (2005-12-22, 1). Late Babylonian copy of a letter to Nazimaruttaš, king of Babylon.
27. K 3045, from Nineveh. Neo-Assyrian copy of a letter of Adad-šuma-ušur, king of Babylon, to Aššur-nārāri III of Assyria and Nabû-dayyāni. Old copy: ABL 924 (Harper), ed. Weidner 1959: 48, no. 42. See also no. 28.
28. K 19350, from Nineveh. Fragment of same text as no. 27, but in Neo-Babylonian script. Lambert (1992a: 34) suspected K 19037 as a fragment of the same tablet, but no copy of it is present in the Nachlass.
29. BM 35496 (Sp III 2), purchased from Spartali & Co., probably from Babylon. Late Babylonian copy of a royal letter (“Kedorlaomer”). Old copy: Pinches 1897: 82–83. Edition forthcoming from J. Taylor.
30. BM 35404 (Sp II 987), purchased from Spartali & Co., probably from Babylon. “Thin tablet: not much lost top and bottom, one wide col. a side.” Late Babylonian copy of a royal letter (“Kedorlaomer”). Old copy of obv.: Pinches 1897: 84–85. Edition forthcoming from J. Taylor.
31. K 4930, from Nineveh. Annotated “same tablet as K 8486,” which L. identified as a late “copy of an Old Babylonian letter . . . from a king to a general about a siege” (Lambert 2007: 145–46).
